

George Thompson,

Monday Evn. June 10. 1867.

6. Guildford Road Lambeth,
London.

My dear Garrison,

Yours of yesterday is just to hand. It finds me pursuing the work in which I have been almost wholly engaged since I reached London - doing my best to make my home convenient, clean and orderly. I have been anxious to get this work over before your arrival in London, and I have now the prospect of doing so. I shall then be free, and can attend to other matters.

I have carefully noted the contents of your letter. Your wishes shall be scrupulously attended to. I take tea with Chesson this afternoon, when we shall converse a bit together respecting the breakfast &c.

I am very glad you have determined in the event of no summons home, to prolong your stay till the middle of October. My earnest hope is that your tidings from Rockledge may be of a nature to impart peace, satisfaction and assurance to your friends, and to give you liberty to accede to the requests that will be prepared to you to visit ~~the~~ friends who will desire to see you.

I hope to be able to send you tomorrow the address of the lodgings you will occupy on reading the alltopolis.
Mrs Thompson, who is an excellent caterer on such matters, will devote this afternoon to inquiries, and report to me the result on her return. I trust she will find the accommodations
you will require, in some comfortable house, in a good situation.

As my head is very far from being in a good condition to day, I must ask you to excuse the brevity of this note. May you come to London in good health, and then here, have favorable weather for sight seeing. I fear Fanny & Frank will be disrupted with London, after Paris.
My best love to them, and kindest remembrance to Mr Villard.

Always, My Dear Garrison,
Federally & lovingly Yours
Geo Thompson
